

Group Programs

Behaviour Collaborations

A supportive way for children and teens to build social connection, everyday skills, and confidence in a small group setting.

Why families choose group programs

Social skills are developed through interaction with others, with the right support in place.

Group programs provide a supported setting where children and teens can practise social interaction with guidance and at a pace that suits them.

Sessions use structured shared activities to build social skills, daily living skills, and confidence in social situations.

Small groups create natural opportunities to join in, connect with others, and build friendships over time.

For parents and carers, it is a reassuring option when you want support that is structured, thoughtful, and suited to your child's needs.

How group programs are run

- Small groups
- Structured sessions with guided activities
- Focused on daily living and socialisation skills
- Ages 4 to 18
- Disability-specific groups available

Each group is designed to be supportive, practical, and appropriate for the participants attending.

Group format spotlight

Dungeons and Dragons is one example of a facilitated group activity. It offers a structured way for participants to practise communication, teamwork, turn-taking, and social interaction in a small group environment.
